Cornelia Sorabji: India's First Female Lawyer and Social Reformer

Born in 1866 in Nasik, India, Cornelia Sorabji defied societal norms from a young age. Driven by a thirst for knowledge and a passion for justice, she became the first Indian woman to study law in England and, in 1892, the first Indian woman to practice law in India.

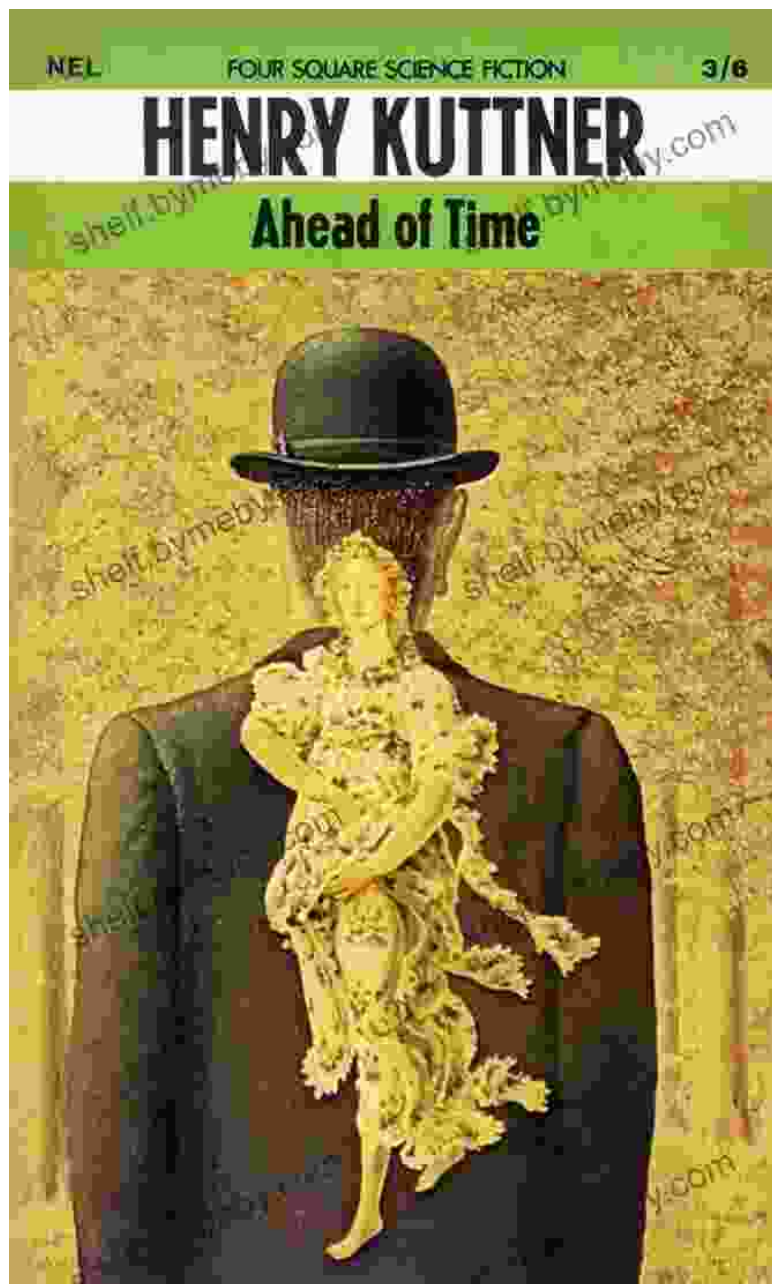

Sorabji's legal career was marked by her unwavering commitment to social reform, particularly in the areas of women's rights and education. She tirelessly advocated for the legal rights of Indian women, working to abolish child marriage and purdah (the practice of secluding women from public spaces). She also established schools for girls and played a pivotal role in the establishment of the National Council of Women in India.
