Half The World Away by Jennifer Robson is a beautifully written and emotionally resonant historical fiction that captures the resilience and determination of the human spirit during World War II. The novel follows the intertwined lives of two women, Margaret, an American war correspondent, and Elizabeth, a British actress, as they navigate the challenges and dangers of a world at war.

Margaret is a young American journalist who dreams of making a difference in the world. When she lands an assignment to cover the war in Europe, she jumps at the opportunity. She believes her work as a journalist can bring the world's attention to the war's horrors. On the other side of the Atlantic, Elizabeth is a successful stage actress with a promising career ahead of her. Her world is shattered when her husband is called to fight in the war, and she must find a way to continue her life in his absence.

As the war rages on, Margaret and Elizabeth's lives become increasingly intertwined. When Margaret is tasked with reporting on the evacuation of Dunkirk, she meets Elizabeth, who is volunteering as a nurse. The two women form a strong bond that will sustain them through the darkest days of the war.

Half The World Away is a story of courage, resilience, and friendship. It is a novel that will stay with you long after you finish reading it.

Exclusive Excerpt from Half The World Away

> Margaret stood on the beach, watching as the boats made their way across the channel to Dunkirk. She was filled with a sense of dread as she realized that she might never see her husband again.

> She took a deep breath and turned away from the beach. She had a job to do, and she couldn't let her emotions get in the way. She walked back to the makeshift press tent and began to write her story.

> She wrote about the chaos and confusion on the beach. She wrote about the bravery of the soldiers as they fought their way to the boats. She wrote about the desperation of the civilians as they tried to escape the advancing German troops.

> She wrote until her fingers were numb and her eyes were blurry. She wrote until she could no longer hold back the tears.

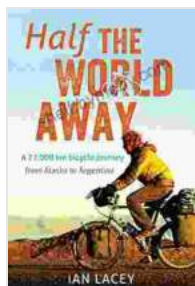

> When she was finished, she handed her story to a runner, who would take it back to London and file it with her editor. She hoped that her story would help the world to understand the terrible cost of war.
