This book draws on a wide range of disciplines, including history, anthropology, sociology, and political science, to provide a comprehensive understanding of the nature of crises, the different ways in which they have been managed in the past, and the most effective models for responding to them in the present. The book also includes case studies of specific crises, such as the COVID-19 pandemic, the 2008 financial crisis, and the Syrian civil war, to provide concrete examples of how the principles of crisis management can be applied in real-world situations.

History, Ethnography, and Models in Times of Crisis is an essential resource for anyone who wants to understand the challenges of crisis management and develop effective strategies for responding to them. The book is written in a clear and accessible style, making it suitable for a wide range of readers, including students, policymakers, and practitioners.
