The Story of Prometheus

Prometheus was a Titan, a race of powerful beings who ruled the earth before the gods. He was a skilled craftsman and a great friend to mankind. He taught them how to build houses, farm the land, and write. But one thing mankind did not have was fire.

Prometheus knew that fire was essential for human progress. It could be used to cook food, keep warm, and light the darkness. But Zeus, the king of the gods, had forbidden humans from having fire. Prometheus decided to disobey Zeus and bring fire to mankind.

Prometheus climbed to the top of Mount Olympus, the home of the gods, and stole a spark of fire from Zeus's forge. He brought the fire back to mankind, and they were overjoyed. With fire, they could now cook their food, keep warm, and light their homes. Prometheus's gift of fire was a great boon to mankind, but it also angered Zeus.

Zeus punished Prometheus for his disobedience. He had him chained to a rock and sent an eagle to eat his liver every day. But Prometheus's suffering did not deter him from his belief that mankind deserved to have fire. He remained chained to the rock for many years, but he never gave up hope.
