The old model of development, which was based on the exploitation of natural resources and the export of raw materials, has failed to deliver on its promises. It has led to environmental degradation, economic instability, and social inequality. Africa needs a new model of development that is based on sustainability, equity, and inclusiveness.

The book "Re-Inventing Africa: The Path to Sustainable Development" offers a comprehensive analysis of the challenges facing Africa and proposes a new vision for the continent's future. The book is written by a team of leading African scholars and practitioners, who have a deep understanding of the continent's history, culture, and politics.

The book argues that Africa needs to focus on building a sustainable economy that is based on the continent's own resources. This means investing in agriculture, manufacturing, and renewable energy. It also means creating jobs and opportunities for all Africans, regardless of their gender, race, or ethnicity.

The book also argues that Africa needs to strengthen its democratic institutions and promote good governance. This means ensuring that all citizens have a say in their own future and that their rights are protected. It also means fighting corruption and ensuring that the benefits of development are shared by all.
